Making Good Journalists Better

From the President

Sandy Johnson | President & COO

In 1789, when America was still young, the Founding Fathers decided some improvements to the Constitution were needed. First among those was the First Amendment: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

Freedom of the press has been the bedrock principle of journalism for more than two centuries. Now, more than ever, it is important to stand with journalists as they seek to bring truth and facts to the public.

The National Press Foundation and its mission of "making good journalists better" has never been more important.

In the past year, NPF has trained hundreds of journalists in-person via webinars, video tutorials, one-day and four-day immersion workshops. From these presentations, we produced digital content that has been accessed 200,000 times across the world, serving as a resource for far flung journalists.

NPF makes a difference.

Freedom of the press has been the bedrock principle of journalism for more than two centuries."

The National Press Foundation is a 501(c)(3) organization that produces free professional development programs for journalists. We aim to increase their knowledge of complex issues and their ability to convey that knowledge across media platforms to the public. Better journalism leads to improved public understanding.

Since 1976, the National Press Foundation has provided in-person training to thousands of editors, producers and reporters in print, broadcast and online media. Our programs educate journalists in the nation's capital, around the country and overseas.

Domestic Programs

Located in Washington, D.C., NPF is ideally situated to provide programs for journalists highlighting the issues of our time. These include: the Paul Miller Washington Reporting Fellowships, Capitol Hill Issues Briefings and one-day programs for Washington reporters. NPF also hosts longer programs on various topics that bring together journalists from across the U.S. Those selected to participate are provided transportation and lodging in addition to the program at no cost.

Our Content Online

NPF's website showcases the rapidly expanding curriculum from our training programs, which includes video, audio, slide presentations, photos and stories from each speaker. See more at nationalpress.org.

International Programs

Internationally, and with international journalists, NPF works under the banner "Journalist to Journalist" to convey the idea of journalists around the world learning together across borders. J2J training programs are often in collaboration with an international conference, allowing participating journalists to attend the conference after specific media training on that subject matter.

Webinars

In 2017, NPF produced and broadcast 17 webinars and video tutorials on topics including health care, politics, multimedia, and business.

The National Press Foundation is celebrating the 30th anniversary of the Paul Miller Washington Reporting Fellowship. The fellowships were created in honor of Paul Miller, a longtime Gannett news executive. In the 30 years since, 563 reporters have been awarded fellowships to learn how to report from the nation's capital. Paul Miller alumni fill leadership positions across journalism and communications. Paul Millers have won Pulitzers, Peabodys and NPF awards. The skills they learned in their Paul Miller fellowship helped propel them into the top ranks of journalism. One-hundred Paul Miller alumni attended the 2018 NPF awards dinner, which included a special event exclusively to celebrate them. Stacey Goers, class of 2010-11, keeps alumni connected via a Facebook group called NPF Paul Miller Fellowship Alumni.

Understanding the Environmental Stakes

Environment program fellows learn about dead zones in Chesapeake Bay.

Fellows looked at proposed budget cuts and how changes at the Environmental Protection Agency and elsewhere could affect the environment. We also saw rules and regulations that could be rolled back, water use out West, the latest scientific research on the environment, and the outlook for clean energy and climate treaties. Fellows learned how to find and use the best data to underscore their reporting on the environment.

What's at Stake for Mental Health and Substance Abuse

Program participants listen to a reporter panel discuss mental health stories.

The National Press Foundation hosted a one-day workshop for journalists about what's at stake on mental health and substance abuse issues in the current political landscape. Expert speakers provided an overview of 40 years of behavioral health advances; implications of reforms under consideration; tensions between payers and providers; language and stigma/discrimination; and ways to incorporate solutions journalism into work.

Arthur C. Evans, Jr. gives a quick interview to a program participant after a session.

Carolyn C. Mattingly Award for Mental Health Reporting

Through the generosity of benefactor C. Richard Mattingly, The Luv u Project has made a 10-year commitment to underwrite the Carolyn C. Mattingly Award for Mental Health Reporting. The award recognizes exemplary journalism that illuminates and advances the understanding of mental health issues and treatments for the illness. The 2017 winner, Rosalind Adams of BuzzFeed News, was selected for a painstakingly-reported investigation of private psychiatric hospitals titled "Intake."

This glass award is given to the Mattingly winner.

The judges said: "Adams' dogged reporting showed that a major for-profit company, which runs 200 psychiatric hospitals, was keeping patients locked up for their insurance money. Her investigation is compelling, chilling and even scary. It is accountability journalism at its best, and government officials are now demanding answers from the company."
